Dear Sirs,

B3TA.COM's "Challenge"

It has recently been brought to my attention that your website is running a fabricated digital image competition on the subject of Zombies. Some of the younger office staff inform me that your site is a satirical website, which often provides a forum for humorous images and animations, and generally this provides a distraction from the rest of the web.

However, reviewing the entries to the "Zombie Challenge" I was dismayed to see that the portrayal of the undead is grossly misinformed, and frankly offensive. I have been instructed by a prominent group of my fellow undead to require B3TA.com to remove these offensive and erroneous images.

The caricaturing of the undead as merely green-skinned, slack-jawed brain-eaters is defamatory and clearly libellous. The ridiculing of our green-tinged skin is specifically prohibited by the "Race Relations (Undead Provision) Act, 1978." Brain-eating represents a fairly small part of the life of the immortal community. I would point out jokes about the Welsh eating human brains are few and far between, despite this being a far greater problem around Swansea.

Zombies contribute greatly to the community at large, and are not deserving of these attacks. There are few areas of accountancy, law, estate agency and Children's TV that do not rely upon the zombie community, and as such, the Undead should be lauded rather than pilloried.

While my clients and I hesitate to suggest legal resource, should these offensive images continue to be accessed via your website we will further review our legal options over a satisfying slice of cerebral cortex.
